01 St. Johns County Is Growing Faster Than Its Safety Net

Behind every statistic is a family shattered, a seat left empty, a neighbor gone too soon. St. Johns County is Florida's most explosive growth story — and its mental health infrastructure is struggling to keep pace with that growth.

When a community grows at twice the state average, demand for mental health services surges in lockstep — but providers, school counselors, crisis centers, and community support networks take years to catch up. In St. Johns County, that lag is costing lives. The infrastructure that catches people in crisis simply has not scaled to match the population.

"Population growth without proportional investment in mental health infrastructure is a recipe for a crisis hiding in plain sight."

— National Council for Mental Wellbeing, 2024

St. Johns County's rapidly expanding population of young families, military veterans, and seniors — all groups at elevated risk — are arriving in a community where mental health services remain critically underdeveloped relative to population size. The county's prosperity masks the pain beneath the surface, making intervention harder and stigma more entrenched. New residents, without established community roots, face uniquely elevated isolation risk.

The Northeast Florida region — including St. Johns County — has already seen veteran suicides drop 25% between 2019 and 2023 through targeted intervention by The Fire Watch network. That proof of concept is powerful: when communities invest in prevention, lives are saved. This Summit is how St. Johns County makes that investment — and how your sponsorship becomes part of the solution.

THE BROADER CONTEXT

Florida's statewide suicide rate reached 14.4 per 100,000 in 2023 — 14% above the national average. St. Johns County's rate of 16.5 per 100,000 already exceeds that elevated baseline, and rapid population growth is widening the gap between need and available care every single year.

"I know you must be in tremendous pain. If you want to talk, I'm here to listen."

— Kevin Briggs, spoken to a person on the bridge's railing, whose life was saved that day

Today Briggs trains first responders, educators, and community leaders worldwide through Pivotal Points, the organization he founded. He is a recipient of the American Foundation for Suicide Prevention's Leadership Award, a trainer for the FBI and Secret Service, and the author of Guardian of the Golden Gate — an Amazon bestseller whose story has been optioned by Hollywood.

WHY KEVIN BRIGGS AT THIS SUMMIT?

St. Johns County's rapid growth brings new residents who often lack community roots and local support systems — exactly the conditions that elevate crisis risk. Briggs embodies the truth that prevention works and that every person is one caring conversation away from choosing to live.
